Generally accepted accounting methods (GAAP) tend to be very conservative and treat items, like R&D, as expenses. We will see later that R&D, if not intellectual capital itself, is a precursor of intellectual capital. Yet intellectual capital hardly shows up on the balance sheet[8]. Neil[9] insists on using discounted cash flow instead of using accrued profits to measure the value of intellectual property. Proper measures of intellectual capital are needed for a true valuation of the firm. What are these other forms of intellectual capital and how can they be measured?

An important dimension of field-of-use cross-licensing is the calculation of balancing royalty payments, according to the relative value of the patent portfolios of each party. This calculation is made prospectively, based on a sample of each firm's leading patents. Weight is given to the quality and market coverage of the patents. Desirable portfolios have excellent patents covering technology widely used in the industry. A quality portfolio is a powerful lever in negotiating access to required technology and may lead to significant...
